Basmati export prices looking up

FE BUREAU
New Delhi, September 27

THOUGH BASMATI RICE output is seen to drop by 10% this year, export realisation has started looking up since May. But exporters are apprehensive about possible gains after a steep increase in shipping costs, despite government assistance. The continuous month-on-month drop in unit value realisation in export started from a peak of $1,107/tonne in July 2019. But price realisation in May rose to $842 from $833 in the previous month; in August it hit $889. There was expectation in the industry that prices might go up over $1,000 due to a lower size of crop, a trade source said.

The drop in output is largely due to an estimated 11% fall to 2.3 million tonne in the crop in Haryana, the biggest producing state in the aromatic rice variety, a state government official said. Though overall sowing area under basmati fell 3.5% to 7.9 lakh hectare, there has been a steep fall in Pusa 1509, the highest-yielding variety, the official said. Other varieties that replaced Pusa 1509 have much lower productivity.

Many farmers, distressed with lower realisation of Pusa 1509 last year, preferred to sell it to the government at the minimum support price, instead of selling in mandis. But the initial mandi prices of the newly harvested crop have created hope for the variety that farmers may not shun it completely. As per Agmarknet data, average prices of Pusa 1509 was in ₹2,800-3,000 per quintal this month; total arrivals were to the tune of 2,627 tonne during September 1-26. Last year, prices were ₹1800-2000/quintal in September-October.

"While the demand from Saudi Arabia may be flat or slightly lower, the import from Iran will depend on the geo-political developments. As these two countries used to buy nearly half of the total basmati shipped out of India, the government needs to use geo-economic strength with EU, UK and other countries in West Asia," said trade policy analyst S Chandrasekaran.
